We were all eagerly watching the actions of half a dozen men-of-war that, scattered along a few hundred yards from shore, were pounding away with rapid-fire guns at every object on the beach that might be suspected of harboring a soldier of Spain.

Two hours of this work satisfied the naval officers that no very obstinate opposition would be made to the landing of the troops, and then we began to disembark.

Cols. Wood and Roosevelt and I were, through the help of the commanding before our turn.

Perhaps not more than a thousand men had then landed. Gen. Wheeler was already on shore, and to Col. Wood he at once assigned a camp-ground, which our colonels proceeded to make

When I first saw him, Gen. Wheeler was lamenting that, so far, no American flag had been brought ashore. Now, I had noticed that among the various articles carried by the orderly trum- a window. peter who had landed in the boat with me was the silk flag of our Arizona squadron. It had been presented by the ladies of Phoenix, Ariz., was a beautiful piece of silk, and very gayly decorated with ribbons. Being in a long canvas cover with some tentequipage, its character had not been discovered. I reported to the general that I was sure one of our flags had come ashore, and offered to send it to him. He said he merely wished to plant it in a conspicuous place, as a matter of sentiment, and to cheer up the men who had not yet been able to leave the Havng no real duties at this time, I volunteered to take this flag and plant it upon the blockhouse, or fortin, as it is called by the Spaniards, which crowns the steep hill to the eastward, overlooking the little town. The general accepted my offer, and after having found the flag and told the orderly trumpeter to earry it, I started up the steep side of the hill.

An infantry sergeant named Wright, seeing us start into the bushes alone, offered to go along as guard. Wright carried his rifle, and Platt (the orderly trumpeter) and I relieved each other took us about half an hour to climb pieces of shells, traces of the navy's work of the morning, and in two cases which ran zigzag up the hill. As I started down the pole, Platt unwound the flag, and, standing up on one corner of the breastworks, waved it violently in the air. Its appearance was the signal for a great demonstration on the part of the fleet. Nearly every ship blew her whistle, and the cheers of the pen were heard even above this vast tooting.

Ordering Platt-who had stolen my thunder by first showing the flag-to come help me, by means of a pole placed against the building I now limbed up to the roof of the fortin. Platt, from the inside, with a crowbar broke a hole through the very apex of the roof, and Sergt. Wright passing me the ensign, I hoisted the United States flag over the first Spanish fortification we had captured.

CHILD'S PLAYHOUSE.

It Is Built in Sections and Can Be Put Up in Entirely Different

There is really no reason nowadays why children should not have playhouses of their own, for portable structures for lawn and garden use are manufactured.

One house of this sort is six feet four inches wide, nine feet six inches long and eight feet nine inches tall from the floor to the point of the gable. This house has one door and one window. The window is divided vertically in the middle, the two halves opening back on hinges at the side edges. The door has glazed sash in its upper part, and it has also a lock and key.

These houses are built in sections, and they can be put up in different ways; that is, they can be set up with the door in the front and the window officer of the Vixen, allowed to land in one end of the house, or they can be set up with both the door and the window in front; the sections are interchangeable.

> There is provided for use with the house a veranda roof, which is made in sections of the same width as the sections of the house itself, so that these veranda sections can be put up together, making a continuous veranda along one side of the house, or they can be put up one over a door and ore over There are made also, for use with

TAYLOR INAUGURATED.

Takes Oath of Office as Governor of Kentucky-Will Try to Secure Repeal of Election Law.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 12.-William S, Taylor was inaugurated as governor at noon. The crowd was much smaller than in past years, due to the weather, which, up till Monday night, was rainy, followed Tuesday by a December blizzard. The inaugural ceremonies were simple. Retiring Gov. Bradley, in the course of his speech, said that he hoped the Goebel election law, which had brought so much turmoil to the state, would be wiped from the statute books. Governor-elect Taylor, in his inaugural address, said:

"The verdict rendered by the people last November was the mandate of the people in favor of civil liberty. It was the tri-umph of the people over the merciless, remorseless partisan machine erected to enslave them.

He said one of the chief aims of his administration would be to secure the repeal of the election law. The oath of office was administered to Gov. Tayor at noon by Chief Justice Haze rigg. The lately defeated democratic candidates for state offices began serving notices of contests Tuesday against the republican candidates who were given certificates of election last week. Several have been served.
